Fundamental Rational:

- Ultratech has maintained its position of being no. 1 cement player in India with capacity of 121.35 Mtpa as on Dec'22 and enjoys ~25% market share on pan India level.
- In order to maintain its leadership position, Ultratech has announced capacity expansion and plans to reach 153.85 Mtpa by FY25E/FY26E.
- Company has clocked healthy revenue / EBITDA CAGR of 12%/14% over FY15-FY22.
- Ultratech has posted industry leading volumes and in the near term volume/demand is expected to be driven by pre-election spending, robust capex allocation in budget, supported by private capex and improved outlook for real estate industry.
- Post Russia Ukraine war led increase in energy prices, EBITDA margins have been hit for the past few quarters, having said that we understand near term margin improvement will be led by weakness in energy cost and improvement of operating leverage.
- Company has been consistently delivering strong OCF which has led to significant deleveraging.
- Key positives: Capacity expansion, better utilization, declining costs, operating leverage, declining debt level.

Weekly Chart

Technical View:

- Ultratech Cement: In the recent weekly trades, from February to October 2022, the stock has consolidated and formed an inverse head and shoulders pattern (A bullish formation) that suggests the near-term outlook is positive.
- Technically, after the pattern formation, the stock has remained sideways, and bounced from the demand zone, the stock has strongly pierced its prior week bearish candle (marked with a circle) and is heading higher. Further the placement of the averages and the ATP values adds strength to the price action.
- We believe stock is poised for retesting its all-time high levels at 8269 dated Nov 2021 as shown above or even head higher. We recommend entering long positions in the range of 7200-7180 with a stop loss below 6840 and a target of 8300 (time frame 4-5 months).
